Antibody Structure

The diagram illustrates the structure of an antibody, showing the Y-shaped molecule composed of two heavy chains and two light chains. The structure is divided into several regions:

- Antigen binding: The tips of the Y-shaped arms, where the antibody binds to an antigen.
- Variable regions: The regions at the tips of the arms, labeled V_H (heavy chain) and V_L (light chain), which are responsible for antigen specificity.
- Constant regions: The regions at the base of the arms, labeled C_H (heavy chain) and C_L (light chain), which determine the antibody's class and biological activity.
- Interchain disulfide bonds: Bonds between the heavy and light chains, labeled C_{H2} and C_{L2} .
- Intrachain disulfide bonds: Bonds within the heavy and light chains, labeled C_{H1} and C_{L1} .
- Hinge region: The region between the variable and constant regions, allowing for flexibility.
- Protein cleavage sites: Sites where the antibody can be cleaved by proteases.
- Complement-binding region: The region where the antibody can bind to complement proteins.
- Carbohydrate: Carbohydrate groups attached to the antibody.
- V_H and V_L variable regions: The regions at the tips of the arms, responsible for antigen specificity.
- C_H and C_L constant regions: The regions at the base of the arms, responsible for biological activity.

WORKSHOP ON TENS therapy in Orofacial Pain

Date- 16 April 2019

REPORT

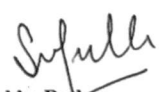

"TENS therapy in Orofacial Pain"

Lecture followed by Hands on programme was conducted by DR. NITIN AGARWAL on Clinical applications of TENS in Orofacial Pain management. A Total of 21 participants attended the Workshop

Trans-cutaneous electrical nerve stimulation (TENS) has been used for its analgesic effects for chronic pain, including facial pain. Here, in this programme we summarize how the electrical stimulation of branches of the trigeminal nerve via TENS has been utilized to reduce pain resulting from trigeminal neuralgia, temporo- mandibular joint disorder, migraine and other headache types, and ocular pain sensations. TENS has been used for both short-term (one session) and long-term (multiple sessions) pain control with little to no adverse effects reported by subjects. Hence, TENS is an effective non-invasive, non-pharmacologic means of pain control for patients with Oro facial pain conditions. Procedure of TENS was conducted and demonstrated to the team of participants.

PRACTICE MANAGEMENT

A programme on Practice Management was conducted by Department of Conservative Dentistry and Endodontics, the lecture was conducted by renowned speaker Dr Sandesh Mayekar at Inderprastha Dental College and Hospital. The programme was an eye opener for all participants as Dr Sandesh shed light on several things which are generally ignored by most of the people in their practice.

- Practice management systems are crucial to the health of a dental practice. They help automate time-consuming tasks so that both the clinical and front office teams can focus on face-to-face interactions with patients.
- It is a set of practices, procedures, and skills that go beyond clinical care, and that is needed to turn an education in dentistry into an actual viable practice.

Also, he emphasized on the need of practice management software available and digital dentistry.
